REFLECTION

When I had nightmares as a child, my father taught me to recite Psalm 27 for comfort: "The Lord is my light and my salvation; whom then shall I fear?" This divine light staves off fear. It's a light that brings comfort and calm and allows us to see in the darkness. But over the years, as I have recited this prayer throughout my life at some of the most challenging intersections, I have come to realize that I have this light within me. As children of God, we all have this light-- and it is up to us to shine this light in the world. We, too, can bring comfort and courage with this light in our words and actions and in our very beings. Yes, self-doubt and lack of self-confidence may suppress the light, and others may try to squelch our light with unkind words, but the light of God yearns to shine and longs to be seen. It is unwavering, unextinguishable, and even contagious! Light will always find the way. Let your light shine!

SOMETHING TO THINK ABOUT
It is not fitting, when in God's service, to have a gloomy face or a chilling look.
